VARIOUS TROUBLES IN ALDERMAN'S COURT

Fred Deloskey Struck on the Head with a Stone During a Quarrel in Which a Knife Was Pulled-Larceny Case and a Perjury Charge Tried by Alderman Atkinson.

Despite the enervating effect of the heat, which has sort of knocked news happenings into a cocked hat, Alderman Atkinson had three cases before him, of somewhat more than ordinary

First in magnitude was the assault and battery charge brought by Fred Deloskey, of Forty-second street. Deloskey has been in the public prints before, but this time he appeared in a new role, that of prosecutor. Deloskey was in a fight yesterday in front of the new Italian Catholic church on Fallbrook street. According to his story, it was a warm fight. There were things doing there that were as caloric as the weather; and Deloskey's appearance bore out his story. He had a gash on the back of his head, from which the blood had flown quite freely, crimsoning his neck and his coat collar.

How it all happened was this wise, said Deloskey. He had been employed for some days at painting the With him were two Italian painters from Philadelphia. It seems that Deloskey is a union painter, while his co-laborers are on the outside of the ranks. Deloskey reminded them of this, or something of that sort; but anyhow, bad feeling arose between himself and the strangers, and words that rivalled the weather passed from one side to the other. The feeling grew and the words increased in warmth, until the climax was reached yesterday afternoon and blows were struck. Deloskey avers that one of his foes struck him on the head with a stone, on the same spot from whence the blood flowed. The other had a ready knife and its appearance prevented him from taking care of himself. It might be said that Deloskey is a most powerful man, as the police can testify, and there must have been some good reason for him not defending himself. The knife wielded or brandished by the other fellow was the "reason" in this instance. Deloskey said, and he was forced to flee before

Constable Moran was given warrants which he served on them last night. FROM OVER GREENFIELD WAY.

The second case heard by Alderman Atkinson was from over Greenfield It was a case of larceny and receiving, in which Farmer Luther E. Lee was prosecutor and another farmer, Frank Pierce, and Gertrude Pierce were defendants. Lee had the Pierces for his housekeepers, and after their removal from his home in April last, he missed some of his furniture. He suspected the Pierces, but he wasn't sure of his ground until this week, when he was given good reason to believe that the missing goods could be located in the Pierces' possession if the law's powers were invoked. Accordingly he made information against his former tenants, and a search of the latter's place yesterday revealed the presence of the shoos

At the hearing, Pierce admitted the possession of the goods and, though he did not explain their presence at his home, he insisted that it was his intention to so inform Lee.

The alderman held Pierce in $200 ball on the charge of larceny, but the other defendant, Gertrude Pierce, who was charged with receiving the goods, he discharged. There was no evidence to connect her with the transaction. The last case was a sequel to the fortune-telling case from the Last Chance settlement, the one in which Mary, the Dane, the reader of cards, was an amusing figure.

Yesterday's case was one of perjury, in which Mrs. Agnes Stone was the prosecutrix. Mrs. Stone is the wife of the man who lost the gold watch which, from the card-reading of Mary the Dane, was indicated was stolen by Blosso Andros. Andros was arrested. but was discharged. Mrs. Stone, to revenge herself, had Joseph Megal, a friend and advisor of Andros, arrested for selling intoxcants without a license She swore at the time that Megal used to buy lager by the keg and then sell it to the residents of the settlement in the same day. large quantities, giving them immensely greater measure than if they purthased it at a licensed saloon. Immediitely after his arrest by Mrs. Stone Megal had her arrested on the charge of perjury, declaring that she swore falsely when she accused him of selling without a license. Andros was Megal's witness. Now, Mrs. Stone proceeds to have both Megal and Andres arrested, on the same charge, declaring that they swore falsely against her when they swore that she swore falsely Rainst them in the other case, which

s now before the court. was a case for a jury to find who was the story-teller, the alderman beieved, so he held Andros and Megal to twait the grand jury's action.

RECRUITING OFFICE CLOSED.

It Was an Unprofitable Venture, as No Enlistments Were Made.

The recruiting office, a sub-station f the Scranton office, in charge of Lieutenant Davis, which was opened in this city on June 3, with Coroporal Mortenson in charge, will be closed this evening.

Corporal Mortenson will this after oon take down the flag that caught the passing eye and indicated the location of the office in the Miners' and Mechanics' bank building, and will leave the city, to return to Scranton.

The office here has proved an unprofitable venture and for this reason it will be abandoned. During the hree weeks or more that the station has been located in Carbondaie, not one enlistment was made. Further, there were only three applicants, and of this number one was under age and the others were not fitted to pass the physical examination. As the mines are working well here and there were few idle men to whom the atractions of army life appealed, the government authorities decided to withdraw its of icer and closed the station.

Corporal Mortenson made many ac quaintances while here and won number of sincere friendships.

Mr. Burns, it appeared, was not authorized by any member of the board to bury the child, though he did achaving a total paid up membership of quaint several directors with the facts and only awaited their consent. In the meantime, however, the neighbors became worried, as the case was one of diphtheria, and the body had aleady been exposed over the allotted time, so he had buried the child. The directors obejeted both to the price, $20, and the fact that he had not definitely instructed by the board.

Lynch moved that the bill be paid McCabe wanted Burns to drop to $15 which he refused to do, but, in a joking way, said he wouldn't haggle over dollar and would take $15. The motion was seconded and lost.

McCabe then asked if the under aker would take $16. Mr. Burns said that as he would have to sue for his pay if he did not accept the $16 he would confer an act of charity on the board and donate the $4 to it. Or motion of McCabe, the revised bill was ordered paid.

The steward was then authorized to hire a man for two weeks to assist in haying.

The following bills were ordered paid: Thomas M. Nealon, $12; David James, $7: Timothy Gilhool, $4: Mrs. Cassie McHale, $3; J. J. Devine, $3; Lynch & Bronson, $18.60; F. L. ACTING NEVER BETTER.

Our Players Are Ables Than Those of Booth's Heyday. Franklin Fyles, in Everybody's Magazine.

After making due allowance for the direction of memory and the enchantment of distance, the fact remains clear that the world has no Booth on the stage at this beginning of a century that may end without producing one. But that proves nothing against my contention that our players, as a body are abler than those of Booth's heyday-that they have risen by merit to higher standardsthat acting is in a good and steadily improving condition. Audiences demand far more than they used to, and get it, too. The noisy declamation of combe will no longer excite a gallery, except to ridicule, and the parquet spurns it with silence that is still more damning. Characters in dramatic fiction must talk and act as persons in real life might under the same circumstances, and the author must write to that purpose, leaving it to the actors to complete the illusion of naturalness. I say "illusion," because the effect of unexaggeration, of being absolutely true to life, is not created on the stage by literal truthfulness. The acme of skill in the acting of the present day lies in such speech and pantomine as will carry the semblance of truth across the footlights by expert falsities. The fond wooer must make you believe that he breathes his forbidden love to his timid sweetheart so softly and covertly that her alert mother in the same room is unaware of what is going on, yet he has to make you hear and see it five times as far away The villian whispers his plot into the private ear of a confederate, yet the furthermost boy in the gallery must get every word of it. The art of acting, as taught and practised, is directed to making an impression of verity by means that necessarily are often deceptive.

In this direction the great advance has been made. All the dramatic schools, and most of the private teachers, are working in that spirit. They employ careful methods where a con- I tainty, and they takes their chance of Business as a Village Store, Carl Hovey, in Ainelce's. The thrifty railroad man of the day thinks un ind puts into practice as many ingenious varieties of economy as can be crowded into the company's message of instruction. The economic laws governing the increase in the trainload have become axiomatic. There is no scope for a trea imagination here. The details of the business, however, fairly teem with possibilities. When the railroad man considers the question of sending six carloads of potatora out to Berryville ha knows tull well that all his cars may need to be hauled back empty. If this sort of thing hapto hire an agent to scour Berryville and the surrounding country for return freights. If this canvasser were appointed and labored a while, and found his labor unproductive, it might then e thought worth while to subsidize some industry, which would in good time yield a fatt return in freight. These are but one or two of the ideas which would gyrate through the heated brain of the railroad man considering that cost of carrying freight out Berryville way. The east ten years have seen some American railresols ided up with as many kinds of business as a illage store. And no matter how great a hodge-podge the etails of a railroad's business may seem to be, it is certain that the railroad managers will treat the thing as if all its knotty parts were so much ineffable dove tailing. Whether it is run-ning an iron mine at Hylo or furnishing geraniun; beds for brownstone stations out on the line to Ingleside, they will affect to total each of the multitudinous features of the enterprise as a simple affair, readily submissible to the rules governing the maintenance of railway systems, That the men sometimes think differently every supply ever becomes absolutely scientific. An old hand in an Eastern freight yard innocently summed up the situation when, with a descriptive
